

Is There a Case for Patent Reform?

Jay P. Kesan

Abstract: In this talk, I will briefly discuss the perceived problems with the patent system, and the specific proposals that are being considered by the last and current Congress. I will also outline where there is a case for reform, what shape that reform might take, and the gaps between an "ideal" patent system and what we might actually end up with in light of the preferences of the major stakeholders.